Cincinnati Children's Cancer & Blood Diseases Institute

Physician, Researcher and Camp Medical Director Adrienne Hammill, MD

When she is not providing care to leukemia/lymphoma patients or seeing patients in the Hemangioma and Vascular Malformations clinic, Dr. Adrienne Hammill conducts research on new treatments for vascular anomalies. Most recently, she became Medical Co-Director of Camp NjoyItAll.

In her research with Dr. Denise Adams, Dr. Hammill studies the drug sirolimus to treat complicated vascular anomalies -- the first such study of its kind for these patients. Her other research interests include capillary malformations and Sturge-Weber syndrome.

Dr. Hammill is also involved in establishing a hereditary hemorrhagic telangiectasia (HHT) center of excellence at Cincinnati Children's. Because of her clinical and research work, Dr. Hammill was recently asked to join the Brain Vascular Malformations Consortium, a project of the National Instititues of Health.

In addition to these clinical and research duties, Dr. Hammill recently became Medical Co-Director (with Dr. Trent Hummel) of Camp NJoyItAll, our camp for CBDI patients. Camp is the highlight of Dr. Hammill's year, where she gets "to interact with patients in an environment far from the hospital, watching them be normal kids, and keeping them safe and happy!"

Seven Hundred Meal Cards for CBDI families – Thanks to William Henry Harrison High School Students

Sometimes family members visiting a patient want to stay nearby during difficult times. These families may be offered free meal cards to make the visit easier thanks to generous donors like students from William Henry Harrison High School, in Harrison, Ohio.

That's because one Harrison student, Lexis Dole, turned a service project for a school class into a fundraiser that collected $3,500. Lexis and fellow DECA club members who helped with the fundraising donated all the proceeds to the CBDI in the form of meal cards.

The hardworking students raised enough money to purchase seven hundred meal cards for families in need. Meal cards are coordinated by CBDI's social work department.

Thank you so much Lexis Dole and the William Henry Harrison High School DECA club members!
